

SAVE THE CITY GARDENS

“Yes, our garden is our playground.”

Having spaces for kids to play in is an important reason for families to carry on living in the city. Green areas provide space and a healthy balance in the city. They contribute to biodiversity in the city and fulfil an important social function. They create natural screens between houses and act as a buffer which protects us against water damage from storms. The city’s gardens are its green lungs and vital dust filters. Join us in protecting our inner city gardens! Don’t allow the last green spaces in our cities to be destroyed! They cost us nothing, yet they are priceless. Together, we can ensure that our city gardens continue to exist and that they can continue to play their important role for man and nature. City gardens are fragile and are often an afterthought in urban renewal projects. This is why it’s so important to protect them.
